EXPECTED LEARNING OUTCOMES

- Gaining a command over the discipline's major theoretical perspectives and the practical applications of major concepts, as well as to read beyond the text and critically reflect on the received discourse of psychology.
- Acquiring skills to design and conduct psychological research.
- Effectively communicating psychological information in written and oral form.
- Using psychological concepts for gaining insight into the self, and for personal growth.
- Acquiring a solid foundation for more advanced studies in the discipline or embark on a psychology related career.

THE RESEARCH CLUB

The research club was initiated within the department of Psychology in August 2019 with the purpose of fostering a research climate among students. The club was open to students from every department of college. A total of 20 members were recruited from departments such as Psychology, Life Science, History and English who interested actively engaged with research through the course of the academic year.

The club conducted a series of sessions taken by faculty members of the department as well as external experts. Topics such as doing a review of literature, formulating a research question, selecting the appropriate research method, qualitative and quantitative data analysis and writing a research paper were discussed during the sessions. Hands on demonstrations and practice sessions of how to operate tools of statistical analysis were also conducted. Alongside these formal sessions, several informal sessions were conducted under the supervision of a faculty member, wherein students who were part of the club designed and executed studies of their own. Students designed studies on topics such as body image, gratitude forgiveness, eating patterns and self-esteem. The Psychology department also encouraged student research efforts by offering five students the opportunity to complete dissertations under the supervision of their faculty.
